

Investigation Summary Report

Smythe Residence (Follow-Up) Leeseville, LA

HISTORY

Thanks again to the very nice and hospitable Smythe family for once again allowing us into their homes. We were hoping to get as active results as our first visit but we had no clue we would get as much as we did!

We started out by running a total of eight IR cams through two of the homes. Camera placement is always the biggest decision in the initial setup b/c you have no clue what areas would be best to try and catch something. After the cams were set up, the DVRs were left to run unattended, checking them periodically.

We began in the empty trailer, which on our first visit, had no activity. This time, as you will see in the videos below, were full of EMF spikes. Remember, this trailer is not connected to any power sources, therefore has no electricity running through it. I say this, b/c in one of the videos, you will see a light switch near the meter. However, if no power is connected to the house, this would have no affect on the meter.

Later into the night, Steve decided to check on the status of the DVRs. He noticed that the door in one of the bedrooms of the empty main house seemed to have moved. The perk of a DVR is that you can rewind while continuously recording. What we saw, amazed us, as we saw what appeared to be a quick, white mist, pass across the bottom right corner of the door. As it passes, the door partially closes! It wasn't until we completely reviewed the video, we found that it moved two more times! One, in particular, you can see an amazing "confetti" type array of orb movement. Following this, the door closes quite a bit. In addition to the door moving, we also caught two interesting light anomalies, one in the same room and the other in the back bedroom.

We had no significant photos and no recorded temperature changes.

In conclusion, it was a wild night and we were honored Bill and his crew were there to witness activity that is not experienced everyday. As with Oak Alley, we most definitely intend on making a third visit to the Smythe residence.
