Old Voinche Building Marksville LA

HISTORY

The Auguste Voinche Store is the oldest commercial building site remaining in the city. Built by Auguste Voinche, native of Paris, France. Later Victorian upper structure on only underground basement in the city. The basement was used to hide cotton from Union troops during the Civil War and the second floor served as a temporary Civil War hospital for troops.

As we conducted our initial walk-through, our sensitive member immediately picked up on a "presence" on the second floor. Our member had no prior knowledge that the second floor was used as a Civil War hospital, yet that is where he felt something.

We set up all our equipment and conducted our investigation in our normal fashion. No unusual activity was recorded during the night and, unfortunately, other than a possible orb photograph, no significant evidence was collected. We all know that no place has activity every single night. Ghost hunting is a "hit or miss" type thing, that requires a lot of luck. We hope to make a return trip to this historic building and hopefully next time, we can experience something.
